Summer 2009

MARITIME AMERICA IN THE AGE OF WINSLOW HOMER

Summer Institute for teachers at UMass Dartmouth

A month-long NEH-sponsored program offering a stipend for full-time K-12 teachers

July 12 – August 8 2009

This summer immerse yourself in the art, lives, and literature of turn of the century New England while experiencing our contemporary working waterfront

The Institute is led by Dr. Arlene Mollo, professor of Art Education at UMD, Dr. Mary Malloy, maritime studies faculty member at the Sea Education Association, Woods Hole, MA, and Captain Peg Brandon, Assistant Professor of Maritime Transportation at Maine Maritime Academy. Also involved are several nationally recognized scholars and consultants.

Our goal is not only to understand the period historically and culturally, but also to explore multiple source materials for discovering the past, including works of art and literature, objects, landscapes, the built environment, descendant communities and a range of historical documents.

We will share our specialized knowledge of maritime history, navigation, art and material culture while we examine Winslow Homer's paintings as a point of departure for our voyage of discovery into what Herman Melville called "the watery part of the world." We are inviting full-time K-12 teachers from all disciplines and levels to join us in this inspiring, interdisciplinary learning experience. We especially encourage applications from teachers of history, arts, science, mathematics, humanities, English, economics and social studies.

Participants will engage in discussions and classroom activities, informal conversations with faculty, travel and creative, collaborative learning activities.
